MONKEY CAN'T GET YELLOW FEVER

A monkey can't get yellow fever. The scientists have tried to persuade various specimens of many breeds, but without success. Man—with the selfishness the militant suffragettes so frequently declare to be his chief characteristic—refuses to permit any member of the animal creation to share his yellow fever with him. An investigation covering a period of ten years, made in Cuba, affirms as its result the conclusion that yellow fever is a strictly human disease, even the mosquito which carries the germ in hordes suffering no ill effects from her nefarious traffic.

The idea that the disease could exist among the lower animals had been used in explanation of the curious sporadic cases that arise with irregular frequency in yellow fever districts. It was, therefore, of immense importance to find out if this were true, or because if the theory were true, it would be difficult if not impossible to stamp out yellow fever completely.

Fortunately, however, this is not the case, and yellow fever belongs peculiarly to man. Yellow fever is one of the diseases which can be stamped out utterly and entirely, and the work of the American sanitary engineers and medical directors in Cuba and Panama is perhaps the most notable example of a battle against a disease that has never been witnessed in the history of medicine.

Yellow fever prevention is a matter only of keeping sanitary measures strictly in hand and of preventing the breeding of large hosts of mosquitoes. If the mosquitoes are kept down there can be no epidemic, no carrying the disease from one patient to another. If there be perfect germs anywhere to give rise to a sporadic case, hence it is that all the outcrops of the disease have come from parts of Mexico under great political turmoil, where the habits of living are primitive and an anti-mosquito campaign is unknown.

HARNESSING THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER

The greatest hydro-electric power plant in the world is now being built on the Mississippi river between Keokuk, Ia., and Hamilton, Ill. The plant will have thirty water-wheel units of a total capacity of 300,000 horsepower, and it will be capable of delivering 200,000 horsepower to its customers more cheaply than it can be made into steam.

The people of Keokuk talked and planned about the project for years. Finally the project was organized by prominent citizens of surrounding towns to obtain the right needed to promote the project and to secure an engineer and money for the work. The city councils of Keokuk and of Hamilton appropriated public money, by unanimous consent of the citizens of the two cities, to this promoting organization which was later paid back into the city treasuries.

Ready for Engineer.

The promoters got the necessary permission from congress to dam the river and then were ready for an engineer. They let their wants be known and there was no lack of applicants for the job. Among others came Hugh L. Cooper. When they indicated that they would like to build a dam he got a private car and took them to Niagara to show them what he had done there. They were convinced.

The plans for the power house provide for the installation of thirty mammoth generators of 10,000 horsepower each. Each of the generators of electric power will be impelled by a turbine water wheel.

Largest Ever Built.

These 10,000 horsepower units are the largest ever built and the weight of the machinery in each will be about
